

19th November 2024

Snow!

Outside it wasn't snowing,

So, I knew where I was going.

To see Chris at GOG,

So, I could do my weekly Blog!

Yes Gogsters! It's another blog post.

Be honest, how many of you were singing the 'Let it snow' tune whilst reading the opening part? (I definitely was as I was typing it!)

As it suggests, on Monday night the snow came down – and as Chris messaged me on Facebook Tuesday morning... 'the weather sucks' there was just one reply to that... 'give it a straw then!'

As always, a friendly welcome was awaiting me and Morgan (chosen Reborn of the week) off Chris. An empty shop due to the now famous and well-known 'British weather!' I reckon if Morgan could walk, I probably would've lost him! (nice floor by the way! – when the shop is crowded you can hardly see it.) But as I mentioned last week, GOG (Guild of Games) is a safe haven for bullied people to come and play games in a friendly environment so you don't mind all the regulars and the odd foam bullet from a NERF Gun flying past!

More discussions with Chris with regards to plans for next year whilst waiting for our coffees to be brought – I think Trish (Chris's Mum) went to Skegness to buy them! (they were still hot as well... must be the new Christmas product of 2024 – Thermos Plastic Cups!)

As promised last week, I can now reveal details of exciting news hopefully happening next year.

Hopefully there will be a few Raffles happening at GOG money going to my 2025 charity 'Frith' – if you have any decent 'unwanted' gifts you'd like to donate as prizes, please drop them off at the shop on High Street.

Also, there maybe a Fundraising Charity Summer Challenge next year based around Taskmasters, so your unwanted gifts maybe used for this as well.

If you have any game suggestions for the Summer Challenge, please email them through my website contact form. (www.foersreborns.net).

Until next week Gogsters.

Tim.